COMMENTARY

"Nampak had a rewarding yet challenging first half of the 2022 financial year. Trading conditions improved as most of the territories we operate in did away with stringent trading restrictions and reopened their economies. Our beverage can businesses achieved remarkable performances and provided the foundation for a strong improvement in the group's interim results, supported by resilient performances from our Zambian and Zimbabwean operations. We continue to review ways of improving the performance from our Plastics businesses.

Revenue, profitability and cash generation improved significantly but required further investment in working capital until such time as commodity prices normalise. These good results were achieved despite global shipping challenges and supply chain disruptions. We have worked closely with various stakeholders to navigate this unique period in order to ensure continuity of supply to our customers and sustainable profitability for the group going forward.”

- Erik Smuts, Chief executive officer

Overview

The first six months of the 2022 financial year were characterised by robust trading conditions in our key markets. Group revenue increased by 24% to R8.1 billion, costs were well managed and group profits attributable to equity holders rose 102% to R222 million. The Metals businesses were the key contributors to revenue and trading profit growth. Local management at each division navigated global supply chain challenges and high commodity prices carefully and showed great resilience with improved overall results for the period.

Our safety levels remained stable and the group lost time injury frequency rate at 0.29 was within the group’s maximum tolerance of 0.32 for the rolling twelve-month cycle.

Forward-looking statements

Certain statements in this document are not reported financial results or historical information, but forward-looking statements. These statements are predictions of or indicate future events, trends, future prospects, objectives, earnings, savings or plans. Examples of such forward-looking statements include, but are not limited to, statements regarding volume growth, increases in market share, exchange rate fluctuations, shareholder return and cost reductions. Forward-looking statements are sometimes, but not always, identified by their use of a date in the future or such words as “believe”, “continue”, “anticipate”, “ongoing”, “expect”, “will”, “could”, “may”, “intend”, “plan”, “could”, “may”, and “endeavour”. By their nature, forward-looking statements are inherently predictive, speculative and involve inherent risks and uncertainties, because they relate to events and depend on circumstances that may or may not occur in the future. If one or more of these risks materialise, or should underlying assumptions prove incorrect, our actual results may differ materially from those anticipated. There are a number of factors that could cause actual results and developments to differ materially from those expressed or implied by these forward-looking statements. These factors include, but are not limited to: changes in economic or political conditions and changes to the associated legal, regulatory and tax environments; lower than expected performance of existing or new products and the impact thereof on the group’s future revenue, cost structure and capital expenditure; the group’s ability to expand its portfolio; skills shortage; changes in foreign exchange rates and a lack of market liquidity which holds up the repatriation of earnings; increased competition, slower than expected customer growth and reduced customer retention; acquisitions and divestments of group businesses and assets and the pursuit of new, unexpected strategic opportunities; the extent of any future write-downs or impairment charges on the group’s assets; the impact of legal or other proceedings against the group; uncontrollable increases to legacy defined benefit liabilities and higher than expected costs or capital expenditures. When relying on forward-looking statements to make investment decisions, you should carefully consider both these factors and other uncertainties and events. Forward-looking statements apply only as of the date on which they are made, and we do not undertake any obligation to update or revise any of them, whether as a result of new information, future events or otherwise.
